Scarlet (The Lunar Chronicles #2) Cinder, the cyborg mechanic, returns in the second thrilling installment of the bestselling Lunar Chronicles. She's trying to break out of prison--even though if she succeeds, she'll be the Commonwealth's most wanted fugitive. Halfway around the world, Scarlet Benoit's grandmother is missing. It turns out there are many things Scarlet doesn't know about her grandmother or the grave danger she has lived in her whole life. When Scarlet encounters Wolf, a street fighter who may have information as to her grandmother's whereabouts, she is loath to trust this stranger, but is inexplicably drawn to him, and he to her. As Scarlet and Wolf unravel one mystery, they encounter another when they meet Cinder. Now, all of them must stay one step ahead of the vicious Lunar Queen Levana, who will do anything for the handsome Prince Kai to become her husband, her king, her prisoner. Marissa Meyer is a fangirl at heart, with a closet full of costumes, a Harry Potter wand on her desk, and a Tuxedo Mask doll hanging from her rear view mirror. Han and Leia are still her OTP. She may or may not be a cyborg. Marissa is also the NYT bestselling author of a number of books for teens, including The Lunar Chronicles, the Renegades Trilogy, and Heartless. To qualify for unemployment, an individual who lost their job must be eligible for work, able to work and actively seeking work, so that component may vary from state to state and could change at any time. Texas, for example, waived their work search requirement for many months but reinstated it on November 1. If you lost your job due to the pandemic or other reasons, here are the steps to take next to file an unemployment claim online. Step 1: Contact Your State Unemployment Agency Whether you were laid off because of the pandemic or lost your job due to other unforeseen circumstances, filing for unemployment benefits is one way to cover a portion of your monthly bills while you're between jobs. Depending on the state you reside in, you will be eligible to apply for unemployment benefits online, in person, on the phone or by mailing in a claim form. Photo Courtesy: JGI/Tom Grill/Getty Images After you've lost your job, contact your state unemployment agency as soon as possible. In most cases, you will file a claim with the state where you most recently relocated from another state, that may not be the case. Long story short, where you're currently residing might not be the state that will pay you unemployment benefits if you haven't lived there long. The state agency will provide guidance on that as well as any other issues that could impact your claim. Step 2: Determine Your EligibilityAs stated earlier, you need to meet certain criteria in order to be eligible for unemployment benefits. In some cases, people who were fired, suspended or asked to take a leave of absence don't qualify for unemployment. It depends on the reason you were fired, and the rules vary by state. Moreover, if you willingly quit your job, are an independent contractor or otherwise self-employed, or can't go back to work for health or other reasons, you might not qualify. (Exceptions are currently in place to qualify independent contractors and the self-employed, but those rules expire at the end of 2020.) Additionally, if your application is denied for any reason, you have the right to file an appeal to try to overturn the denial. Step 3: Verify Your Identity Your Identity Your Identity Your Identity Your application, or they could be the last steps in determining your eligibility. Set up email notifications, if possible, and watch closely for any messages requesting additional information. These types of requests are typically very time sensitive. Photo Courtesy: Justin Sullivan/Getty Images In some cases, an unemployment official will interview you to clarify and verify details regarding your case and your identity. If you fail to answer the questions correctly — or don't consent to this process — you will most likely be asked to provide the agency with documents that verify your identity. Step 4: File Your ClaimOnce you confirm your eligibility, it's time to file your claim. Nearly all unemployment agencies accept claims online, especially in light of the COVID-19 pandemic. The online process isn't just helpful for pandemic safety reasons. Virtual systems also reduce errors and speed up the claim process. Photo Courtesy: SDI Productions/E+/Getty Images When you file your claim, you will be asked for some personal information, including your name, address(es), social security number (SSN), last 18 months of employment history, a record of wages earned and the reason and dates for your employment termination. If you want to make sure your claim isn't delayed, be sure to complete all the sections fully and accurately. Finally, keep in mind that unemployment benefits are taxable, so it's generally wise to choose to have taxes withheld from each payment when you first open your claim. Step 5: Collect Your Unemployment BenefitsMost claims are processed within two to three calendar weeks or 10 business days, although delays could occur during times of high claim volumes. Several states conduct telephone interviews before the final ruling to help prevent potential unemployment insurance fraud. During this interview, you will be asked specific questions about your employment background and other information mentioned in your claim. Photo Courtesy: skaman306/Moment/Getty Images Once your claim has been processed, you will need to make an appointment at your nearest American Job Center for your state or set up an account online. These state-run agencies give people access to job listings and career training resources, and registration is mandatory to receive your unemployment agency for assistance. While you may be breathing an initial sigh of relief once your initial claim is processed, be sure to maintain your eligibility status by continuing your job search once you start receiving unemployment benefits, you have to file weekly or biweekly (varies by state) payment requests online to be paid — no exceptions. You'll be required to answer some questions about any work you completed each week as well as any other income you received. If you fail to file your weekly claim, your benefits may be delayed or stopped altogether. Although this rule may vary by state at times due to special circumstances (like a global pandemic), the general rule of thumb is that you're expected to pursue work leads every week and report your work search efforts in your weekly claim. I'll admit here that Scarlet begins with a young woman living in Rioux, France whose grandmother has gone missing. I'll admit here that Scarlet is probably the book I like least in the whole series, though considering how in love I am with these books that's really not saying much. Especially since Scarlet is the book in which we first meet my all time favorite character in existence, above all other character in existence, above all other character in existence in which Carswell Thorne is present and I find myself swooning and giggling and grinning like a madwoman. I've often vehemently hated stories that subscribe to the insta-love trope, finding them thoroughly unrealistic and annoying. In a strange turn of events, I didn't mind it with Scarlet. In fact, irony of all ironies, I didn't even notice that this was a part of the book until it was pointed out to me a few years after I'd read it. And naturally I got exceptionally angry at the mere notion and was immediately primed to deny, deny, until I re-read it and realized that I was perfectly willing to accept it. By the end of the book, considering the psychology of people and the factors involved, it doesn't even feel surprising to me. Anyone who knows their fairytales obviously knows which one the second novel in The Lunar Chronicles is inspired by. Though there are a great many similarities to Little Red Riding Hood, the surface level ones are basically where it ends. For the most part, Scarlet is hard to predict. There are several things one can infer, of course, when comparing with what they know of Little Red, but the differences are definitely enough that you could make any number of predictions and not necessarily arrive at the conclusion. I found that aspect quite fun. Our Wolf is a street fighter we meet early on and manages to quickly enmesh himself into the unfortunate situation Scarlet is facing with her grandmother's disappearance. While the police have deemed it that Scarlet's grandmother has left of her own accord or committed suicide, Scarlet remains certain that something awful has happened and soon sets out to find her. Meanwhile, we meet Cinder just where she left off in the last book—which I will omit to avoid spoilers—and the most amazing character of Carswell Thorne, perfect and flawed in all the right ways, is quickly introduced in a way that gives readers a wonderful insight into his personality. And herein lies my reasoning for Scarlet being my least loved—though still deeply loved—of all the books in Meyer's exemplary series; there simply wasn't enough of Thorne. Every time I read it, I find myself impatiently rushing through the Scarlet and Wolf chapters due to a desperate need to read the ones in which Cinder and Thorne are featured. The book begins with Scarlet and even in the first time I read it, I impatiently awaited the moment I would find out what would happen in Cinder's portion of the story. I've always felt that the Scarlet chapters took too long, which is unfortunate since the book. I reckon it is much more of a personal moment for me that makes me feel that the Scarlet and Wolf chapters drag, since I've pushed this book onto my friends every chance I get and they, so far, haven't ever seemed to have the same opinion as I did. And no matter how I feel about Scarlet, I have to say it is thoroughly impressive how Meyer melded Cinderella and Little Red Riding Hood into the series, mixing them in a way more perfect than I ever could have imagined.
